VIGILANCE NOT RELAXED

Sheriff Palmer Guards Over-the-River Saloons a la New York.

ROSLYN GAMBLERS LOAFED

Four Constables Yesterday Kept the Touts and Things from Stimulating Their Passions—Evangelists No Longer Use Candler's Hall—Crab Shooters Had No Chance to Play.

Notwithstanding the victory of "Little Dickie" Johnson, the friend and patron of the thugs and gamblers of Alexandria county, over W. H. Douglas, the reform candidate, in the contested election for commonwealth attorney, the clusters of gambling dens and rum shops on the Virginia side of the Potomac were again closed yesterday, and the day was an orderly and free from excitement as the two preceding Sundays have been.

The vigilance of Sheriff Palmer has apparently not relaxed, and his determination to maintain law and order in his domain has become well known to the gamblers and saloon keepers, both at Jackson City and Roslyn.

At the railroad gambling and drinking resort at the end of the Long Bridge yesterday the place looked bleak and the assembled loafers looked bleaker. Mud street from the end of the bridge to the race track was a mass of deep holes, filled with black mud and water, utterly impassable for pedestrians except in places.

Harry Candler's saloon was closed and the scene doors on the porch in front of the place swung seldom. Mack's place and Joe's saloon were also tightly barred, but the usual crowd of bums and touts stood in front of the two saloons or lounged around on the big platform in front of the feed store.

EVANGELISTS ARE SHELTERLESS. Matchett's Mission, as Candler's Hall was named for two or three Sundays, has been given over to other purposes, and the Evangelists are no longer allowed the privilege of holding Gospel services under shelter. The afternoon meetings are held now, as when they first started, along the railroad track about midway of the town.

They have come to be looked upon as a regular Sunday afternoon occurrence by the residents and frequenters of the place, and now that the novelty has worn off, they attract little attention.

The prevailing idea among the enterprising citizens of the place is to get as much as they can out of any and all who come their way with the least possible exertion. That is the standard set, and all live up to it religiously, if anything can be done that way across the river. There is more physical calm and lack of movement everywhere in Jackson City than in any other place of its size on the globe.

Yesterday four constables kept vigilant watch on the place and it was impossible to start even a game of craps among the bums. They just loafed around and kept their eyes peeled for any possible opening.

HIS LIFE WAS ONE LIE

Ex-Congressman Greene De-severed Wife and Child.

DEATH LIFTED THE VEIL

For Years He Has Been Living in Luxurious Style in New York with Margaret Sly, While His Family Were in Want—Known in Washington as a Lobbyist.

The recent death of ex-Congressman George W. Greene, at his home, No. 336 West Forty-sixth street, New York, developed the fact that he had been for years leading a double life. His death took place in the home of a woman for whom he had abandoned wife and child.

For the past four years Judge Greene spent the entire term of each session of Congress in Washington, and was a familiar figure here and well known. When in the city he was a guest at the Riggs House, and had for his associates in the scheme to secure favorable action on the New York and New Jersey bridge bill Messrs. Charles H. Swan, who also had quarters at the Riggs, and James T. Sparkman, who made his home at the Arlington.

No face was more often seen among the habitués of Chamberlain's and the Riggs House, or in the corridors of the Capitol than his.

QUEER RUMORS AFLOAT. Rumors were current here several months ago which reflected upon Judge Greene's management of the business in the charge of the syndicate, and it was stated that he had refused to allow his confederates to handle or even to see the bonds issued by the bridge syndicate.

The plans for the bridge are still in the hands of Secretary Lamont, of the War Department, and whether the death of Greene will solve an intricate problem or entangle the project more hopelessly remains to be seen.

The deceased was a prominent politician in his day, but about two years ago settled in New York, and gave his final efforts to the furtherance of the bridge scheme, the building of a bridge to span the North river. He was in poor health then, and gave out that he proposed to stop at a sanatorium on West Forty-sixth street. His friends heard of his illness with regret and accepted his explanation as sufficient reason for his not returning to his native town of Groton.

It has been ascertained that the sanatorium was a private house, a brown stone front in a fashionable neighborhood. There was a woman there who was recognized as Mrs. Greene, and who claimed Judge Greene as her lord.

The couple lived most intimately, and exacted themselves for an apparent lack of neighborliness upon the grounds that the judge's death forbade the exercise of hospitality. The house was quite handsomely furnished.

REAL WIFE IN POVERTY. Meanwhile there was another Mrs. Greene, who proves to have been the real wife, living with a daughter in obscurity and poverty in the village of Groton. She did not know the truth, but her husband's abandonment almost broke her heart. She continued her struggle for support, all unconscious of the depths of her husband's treachery, and unaware of the disgrace he had brought upon his name.

Her husband, it is said, at first sent her $15 per week for her maintenance, but, as it was the resistance finally ceased, and the wife was too proud to inquire the reason. Mother and daughter labored for their own support, and their poverty finally came to the knowledge of the husband and father, and he wrote a bitter letter, reproving them for "working like two beggars," but he sent them no money.

Finally rumors became current of Greene's conduct, and his name was coupled with that of Margaret Sly, the daughter of a former of Orange county, New York.

Miss Sly proved later to be the judge's companion in the so-called sanatorium. When he was here as a member of the Fifty-first Congress, a position from which he was ousted by contest, she is said to have been with him.

DEATH REVEALED ALL. The story did not stop with the death of Mrs. Greene, and after his return to Groton he for a time avoided Miss Sly, but later the relations were resumed. A scandal was then partially revealed by the newspapers, but it was quickly hushed up. Nothing has been known since.

His death brought to light the sordid story of his dual life. Margaret Sly is described as being a beautiful girl, and the judge's partner for her husband, which was but a child. She is said, however, to be as vicious as she is handsome.

Insinuations are current that she murdered her foster father, David Nanny, several years ago, and that later she set fire to the old Nanny dwelling and buried it to the ground. A strange circumstance, corroborative of the first allegation, is that she was almost the sole beneficiary of Nanny's will. In the contest over the provisions of that document, Judge Greene became her counsel, and here is where their intimacy began.

At the time of his death Greene was not connected with the bridge company. He lived in New York practically under an assumed name. The change of a single letter being sufficient to conceal his identity.

SHOT FROM AMBUSH

Unknown Man Fires Upon Jesse Webster—No Clue to Identity.

Jesse Webster, colored, nineteen years old, was brought to the Emergency Hospital at 5 o'clock yesterday morning, suffering with a gunshot wound in the back below the left shoulder.

He was cared for by the hospital staff, and has about an even chance to live. The bullet had torn its way into the muscles of the back, and it is thought penetrated to the thorax.

The victim could not be found, and it is not known what sort of a weapon was used.

Webster comes from Hall's Hall, at three and a half miles back of Roslyn, Va. His companions who brought him here in a wagon said a party of them were walking through the woods last night, and Webster was a sudden report from behind them, and Webster sank to the ground wounded. They made a rush to try to find who fired the shot, but discovered nothing whatever that would give even a clue to his identity.

Outing Club Triumphant. The Washington Outing Club and the American Athletic Club crossed bats yesterday and the former scored a victory to the tune of 15 to 4. Jack Gilroy and Joe Lovelace were in the points for the Outing club, and a hit was made by the opposing team for six innings. Lovelace was simply gilt-edge in his stickwork, and he was to his credit two home runs, a triple and a single. Gilroy was superb all around, Sherman and Walters formed the Athletic Club battery. This was the first of a series of games which these two teams will play at the Washington Outing Club Park.

Funeral of William Willis. The arrangements for the funeral of the late William Willis have been perfected. The body will be carried to-morrow from the house to Ashbury Church, K and Eleventh streets northwest, where the ceremonies will be performed under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity. Services will be held at 2 p. m. Interment at New Graceland Cemetery.

Amateur Baseball. The Riverides defeated the Potomac Stars by a close score of 14 to 13. The winning battery was Sweeney and Humphries. Booby Bill Frawley brought in the winning run by a drive over center fielder's head.

SUNDAY IN CHINATOWN

How the Celestials Spend the American Sabbath.

FEAST, GAMBLE, AND GOSSIP

Quong Sang Lung's Store and Restaurant a Favorite Resort—Joss House off the Washington Branch of Chinese Freemen Also There—Charlie Kee's Version of Blackmailing Cases.

A Sunday afternoon passed in Chinatown in an interesting experience. To those to whom the "ways that are dark" of the Celestials are matters of hearsay, such an afternoon will be crowded with strange sights and stranger sounds; glittering costumes, weird-looking tobacco pipes, yellow-skinned Chinamen of all ages and conditions, and a jumble of remarks alongside of which the behavior of a lonesome donkey would be music heavenly and divine.

The American Sabbath is a day of rest and recreation to the Mongolians. At noon the Celestials are at their favorite resort for Chinamen from all parts of the city, and there they congregate in great crowds on Sundays. On the second floor of the building is a Chinese restaurant and on the top floor is the House of Joss, belonging to the Washington branch of Chinese Freemen. There they sit around in a public place and are patronized very freely by Americans, but the House of Joss is sacred, and none but the initiated members of the order dare venture within the consecrated portals.

WHERE THEY MOSTLY CONGREGATE. The store of Quong Sang Lung, at No. 214 Broadway, is one of the favorite resorts for Chinamen from all parts of the city, and there they congregate in great crowds on Sundays. On the second floor of the building is a Chinese restaurant and on the top floor is the House of Joss, belonging to the Washington branch of Chinese Freemen. There they sit around in a public place and are patronized very freely by Americans, but the House of Joss is sacred, and none but the initiated members of the order dare venture within the consecrated portals.

THE QUONG SANG LUNG STORE is a branch of the immense importing house of Quong Ching Yuen, of Mott street, New York, and is the largest Chinese supply store in Washington. Nearly all the laundries in the city, procure their supplies from there, and most of their ordering is done on Sundays. They are in a quite extensive affair, and their stock of Chinese goods is large and varied.

As Moy To Mow, as Charlie Kee, the Quong interpreter, is known, is extorting money from the Celestials, he is a public enemy of the Celestials, and he is in this city prosecuting the cases against Yoy Ah Sing, a Chinese, who was charged with the murder of a Chinese.

He has pursued the calling of interpreter ever since, and for the past thirteen years has resided in Chicago. Kee was the promoter of the Chinese village at the World's Fair, and says that he and several other capitalists lost a great deal of money by the venture.

SPEAKING OF THE CASES against the three Chinamen to be tried Tuesday night, Kee gave a reporter some interesting information regarding the society of which he claims the three men are members. The Society of Hip Sing Tong, as it is called, was the first organized in New York many years ago for the purpose of protecting Chinamen from the poor and more ignorant Chinamen. The name signifies in the Chinese language bold, daring men, and it is calculated to inspire terror and respect among its victims. The members operated for some time in New York successfully, but the authorities finally became aware of their power, and a number of the members were sent to the penitentiary. Others were scattered around throughout the country and several branches of the order sprung up.

The society in this city, he says, is under the direct leadership of Waring S. Charles, the well-known New York Chinaman, who figures in the case of the Chinese who were charged with the murder of a Chinese. Next to him in the order of rank comes Wong Gatt, also from New York, and Lum Kee Sing, known to Americans as Charlie Tong Sing, also in high favor.

BLACKMAIL THEIR PURPOSE. Kee declares that the fact that these men "cut the prices of laundry work in their places has nothing whatever to do with the prosecution. Dozens of other Chinamen all over the city have cut down their prices, he says, but were not interfered with, and will not be molested as long as they behave. The Chinamen who are now being prosecuted for blackmailing, he says, came here several months ago and got together for that purpose.

Moy A. Foon, he says, as soon as he found out that a warrant was out for his arrest got frightened and ran away. First he went to Baltimore, but not feeling safe there, he kept on until he reached Boston, the former home of Chin King, where he has friends. This flight Kee considers an evidence of his guilt.

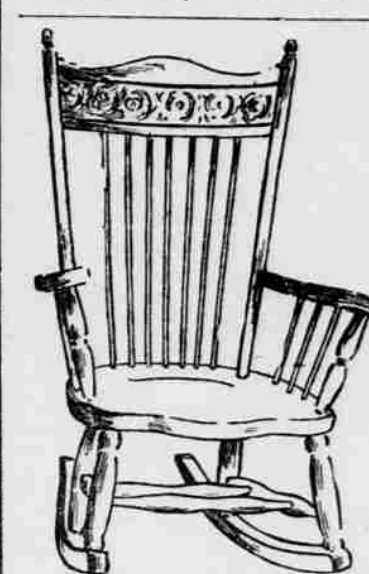

The house on the corner of Fourth and a-half street and Missouri avenue is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ah Sing and their family. Mr. Ah Sing, he says, is a Chinese plaintiff now in that he is friendless. Only a falling few have clung to his shattering destinies. In days ago, he says in a mournful English, he could sound the clarion call of the Hip Sing Tong and his friends would flock around him. Now he calls until the cows come home and he can't get out a quorum.

MAYER & PETTIT,

RELIABLE HOUSEFURNISHERS,

is a small private Joss House, into which the reporter made bold to enter. The shade of the divine is on the top floor, and all the inmates of the house were down in the basement smoking opium, so there was no trouble in reaching the gaily-decorated room unobserved by the faithful.

IN THE JOSS HOUSE. A Joss House is an interesting place, and the fact that only two floors separated the profane intruder from a score of well-eyed celestials in various stages of dope dream makes it more interesting than otherwise.

On the walls of this particular abode of Joss there were several pictured representations of very ugly divinities, a Chinese lantern hanging before each. In front of the portrait of the principal Joss stood an altar, and it is there that the reverent Chinamen burn incense and get tips on their lotteries. Several colored lights were burning on the altar and a pungent odor filled the room. Joss sticks were lying around in profusion, and a couple of Joss filled with sweet-smelling slips of wood on which Chinese prayers were written, stood on each side.

When the devout celestials want to pray, he doesn't have to go and laboriously think out a prayer, and then recite it to the Joss, like a school boy on Friday. He goes to the room where his Joss keeps tab on their lotteries. Several colored lights were burning on the altar and a pungent odor filled the room. Joss sticks were lying around in profusion, and a couple of Joss filled with sweet-smelling slips of wood on which Chinese prayers were written, stood on each side.

CONCLUSION OF THE TRIAL OF HOSPITAL. The War Department has been advised of the conclusion of a most unusual case, giving rise to a trial by court martial. In the Department of the Missouri.

HOSPITAL STWARD MORGAN SAVIDGE at Fort Reno was convicted and sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from the service for the part he played in the sale of public property at the post at which he was auctioneer.

All required preliminaries had been observed, but at the sale the bidding was practically confined to a citizen and steward, he being the auctioneer as stated. He was convicted upon the theory that for corrupt purposes, in order to become possessor of the property himself he conducted a practical fictitious sale.

Major General Merritt, in an order disapproving the finding and sentence of the court martial, reviewed the circumstances surrounding the sale and said: "It was within the discretion of the post surgeon who testifies he was present, to suspend the sale and direct that the property be re-advertised for sale at some future time. He, however, in the exercise of a lawful discretion, chose to confirm the sale, and having done so it must be held to be valid."
